Course Description:

If ever there was a time when leadership really matters, it's now. The past few years have included all manner of challenges: climate change induced disasters; a global pandemic leading to more than seven million deaths, lockdowns and disruptions to every part of life; economic recession and disruptions; an uprising to address systemic racism and oppression; escalating conflict and uncertainties that come in contentious political times.

It is also a time when we see new leaders rising up, in their own spaces and sectors, to lead us through the challenges we face. Sometimes these leaders emerge from peak posts within organizations or institutions; but, often they emerge from far less expected places. Teenagers are leading protests of thousands. Faith leaders are reaching beyond their traditional communities to address major social issues. Simple acts such as taking a knee or wearing a mask have become mobilizing expressions.

But what exactly is leadership? What forces and factors are shaping the current context for leadership? Who are the voices that we are not hearing, but need to be? Are the tasks of leadership today common across sectors, or is there variation in the skills and knowledge needed? What does it mean to be an effective leader – or, a leader with heart – during extraordinary times or when faced with unprecedented challenges?

If you find yourself with more questions than answers when thinking about leadership in the current context and an appetite to explore these questions – well, this course is for you.

Learning Outcomes:

Identify, classify, compare, critically integrate, and generalize using theories, research methods, and core ideas related to the nature and styles of leadership;

Integrate knowledge and develop critical understanding of the connections and interplay between governance and leadership;

Demonstrate critical awareness of and commitment to the public good and ethical decision making, including transparency and accountability;

Develop self-awareness about their own leadership styles and interests; and
