Course Description:

What does leadership look like in this moment? Is leadership an opportunity reserved for those with important positions or large platforms, or can it emerge from less expected places? What, exactly, is leadership – and what forces and factors are shaping the current context for leaders? Or for leadership? What does it mean to be an effective leader – or, a leader with heart – during extraordinary times or when faced with increasingly unprecedented challenges?

If you find yourself with more questions than answers when thinking about leaders and leadership in the current context and a strong appetite to explore these questions – well, this course is for you.

Learning Outcomes: one outcome per entry

Identify, classify, compare, critically integrate, and generalize theories, research methods, and core ideas related to the nature and styles of leadership

Integrate knowledge and develop a critical understanding of the connections and interplay between leaders and followers

Demonstrate critical awareness of and commitment to the public good and ethical leadership, including transparency and accountability

Develop self-awareness about their own leadership approaches and interests

Understand and critically analyze the challenges and opportunities faced by contemporary leaders

Textbooks and Course Materials:

This course draws extensively on one central textbook which students are strongly encouraged to obtain. Please access the 10th edition:

Peter G. Northouse (2026), Leadership Theory and Practice, 10th Edition, Sage College Publishing.

The textbook is available via the Western Bookstore. The book costs $94 for a 180-day e-book or $241 to purchase a hard copy (purchase here: link for Section 550 students and for Section 551 students). Copies are also available for short term use at the Huron library (details here).

Where other materials are drawn upon in the class, these will be provided in OWL Brightspace at no additional cost to students. Course materials may change or be added, as events develop (e.g., relevant media articles about current events could be added throughout the course).
