

ENG 353G: Black Writing in Canada

What does it mean to be Black in Canada?

Black writing in Canada encompasses a rich and diverse array of literature that reflects the experiences, histories, and cultural expressions of Black Canadians. From George Elliott Clarke to Dionne Brand to Afua Cooper, Lawrence Hill and K'Naan, Black Canadian writers contribute to a deeper understanding of the nation's past, present, and future through their stories, lyrics, poems, and essays.

Explore the dynamic influences of a rich literary and lyrical tradition in this new course at Huron University College.

Prerequisites: 0.5 First-Year English credit. This is an elective course for English and non-English majors.
All are welcome!

For more information, contact Dr. Nassisse Solomon (nsolomo4@uwo.ca)

