Course Description:

The cost of housing in Canada, both ownership and rental, has increased rapidly over the past decade, outpacing increases in incomes. Housing has become unaffordable for many, but certainly not all, Canadians. This course explores several aspects of Canada's housing crisis. First, the basics of Canada's housing system: who does what, what can be built where, and the roles of key public, nonprofit and private sector actors. Second, the nature and extent of the housing affordability problem and how it varies (by region, generation, income). Third, drivers of housing demand (migration to and within Canada, household formation). Finally, housing and land use policy at the national, provincial and municipal levels and other factors affecting the supply and cost of housing.

The GLE learning strategy is grounded in case studies that allow up-close exploration of the ways in which 21st century policy issues play-out in theory and in practice. The course is designed to allow students to apply the concepts and material covered in the course to an in-depth case study of housing affordability in a specific Canadian city. It will include field trips to meet with people involved in the housing system in London.

Learning Outcomes:

Comprehensive introduction to Canada's housing system and multi-level governance. Students will gain understanding of critical concepts such as "housing as a system," multi-level governance/federalism.

Teaching support and research opportunity for students to apply theoretical concepts to case studies. Students work with leading-edge housing scholarly sources and conduct their own analyses of housing affordability in a Canadian city.

Time and tools for students to work collaboratively in developing governance case studies and in sharing research work.

Equip students with the knowledge and skills to use the case study method to understand how governance theory plays-out in practice.

Build on the foundation of concepts learned in earlier GLE courses on public policy, governance and leadership.

Textbooks and Course Materials:

This course will draw on readings from a range of academic disciplines, as well as government plans, think tank publications and other sources, all of which will be available through the library or on the course OWL Brightspace. There is no core textbook.
